Giving away the grace that God has placed in our relationships and families.

Why is Coaching Needed?

- Individuals learn best when they have a model to follow
- Coaching can be a very effective way to address areas in our lives that are under-developed
- Couple-to-couple or parent-to-parent interaction has proven to be very effective
- Coaches empower individuals to be change-agents in their own relationships

How Do We Become Coaches?

As a coach you will:

- Learn how to use the Life in Motion Relationships Inventory to identify the strength and growth areas in a relationship
- Teach couples and parents the art of conflict resolution
- Help individuals recognize the grace that God has deposited into their relationships
- Model and equip couples and parents to effectively pray for each other
- Direct couples to other resources to help them in their marriage and family life

What Does a Coach Do?

- Meet four to six times with the couple or parent
- Help couples or parents see what is good about their relationships
- Give spiritual and practical guidance
- Assign homework
- Identify strength and growth areas in their relationship
- Experience a new sense of God's love, grace and truth in your own relationship with your spouse or children
